

Ultrasound Update

Ultrasounding yearling breeding stock in valid contemporary groups allows for the early detection, although still at a low accuracy, of those animals that have outstanding potential for carcass traits. Perhaps more important, it identifies those animals that are extremely poor representatives of the breed. Either way, it is objective information that can be used to calculate Carcass EPDs, which can then be used by commercial customers when evaluating potential Red Angus seedstock.

Please find the 2007 Ultrasound Technician list from the Ultrasound Guidelines Council (UGC). These technicians are certified for the year 2007 by the UGC as field technicians. They meet or exceed the requirements of the Ultrasound Guidelines Council to collect ultrasound scan images on beef cattle for fat thickness, ribeye area, rump fat and intramuscular fat. The Red Angus Association of America requires that a certified technician be used to enable the Association to accept the data.

Please also find listed the four centralized laboratories for processing ultrasound images. These labs utilize only technicians that meet or exceed the requirements of the UGC to interpret beef cattle ultrasound images for fat thickness, ribeye area, rump fat and intramuscular fat. In addition, these labs use interpretation software that has been UGC approved and/or validated.

The Ultrasound Guidelines Council was started several years ago by the Beef Breed Council as a method of assuring minimum standards for ultrasound data quality. The Red Angus Association of America was very active in the formation of the UGC, and strongly supports its ongoing goals and actions.
